1. A poor old la - dy trudged a - long a crowd - ed thor - ough - fare, Though
2. The young man hur - ried to his desk soon bu - sy at his work, Con - un - pro - tect - ed and a - lone still no one seemed to care, She sult - ing with a - maid - en fair his ev - er faith - ful clerk, And tried to cross a bu - sy street but turned back in dis - may, And day by day their friend - ship grew and ri - pened in - to love, And ma - ny stopped and laughed at her while oth - ers went their way, A soon she'll be his love - ing wife as true as stars a - bove, He kind young man stepped to her side and of - fered her his arm, He meets his sweet-heart's moth - er now who's form is old and bent, He grave - ly bowed and said to her I'll shield you from all harm, He tells her of their hap - py plans and asks for her con - sent, She spoke to her so ten - der - ly the tears came to her eyes, And grasps him warm - ly by the hand her joy is plain to see, I when he faced the cur - ious crowd he said to their sur - prise.

know you'll al - ways treat her well these words you've said of me.

"WING LEE'S RAG-TIME CLOCK."

By Al. Trahern.

HERE'S THE IDEA: Wing Lee, an ambitious Chinaman, bought a clock and placed it in his laundry, but to his dismay and the coons' delight it ticked rag-time. Coons by the score rushed in and danced night and day to the ticking of the clock, while poor Wing Lee, frightened out of his wits, loudly yelled this chorus: "No likee rag-time, no likee coon. All lookes samee to me," etc., etc.—Rag-time chorus, Chinese verse.
